A correspondent from the Bellinger writes a blood-curdling yarn about a black snake and an iguaua having a fight. Black snake bites iguana-- iguana feeling unwell scampers off for a mouthful of Lobelia purpurascens, and comes back to continue his encounter with the snake. Another informant tells me that the effect of the Lobelia on the iguana is to make him vomit up the snake-poison. I have had a number of letters and conversations, from which I understand that this belief in L. inflata as an antidote to snake-poison is very generally held on tho northern rivers. Now I want to know what is the basis for this opinion. Can anybody give me specific instances of men or animals who have recovered from the bite of a poisonous snake after treatment with Lobelia purpurascens? The plant undoubtedly contains...
