Excerpt: . . . inexperience, and make the resolution to be watchful over those under your care, and firm in guarding them from falling in the way you did yourselves. Those who find, or have reason to fear, that they have been negligent in the sacred duty of watching over their children, must not give way to useless repining, but strive to repair the evil they have done. By an earnest zealous devotion to the dying, they will strive to earn for their own children a good death, and, as I have said, most certainly they will obtain great graces at the all-important hour of death for those who belong to them, if they have assisted others in that time of need. You will act wisely by doing this. We have high example given. You know the parable of the unjust steward; he was not faithful to his charge. Your great charge was your children. You have not been faithful to your charge, therefore you have been unjust to them. What now must you do What was the conduct of the unjust steward He called those who owed money, who were in debt to his lord, and remitted part of that debt, thinking that in gratitude they must and would do something for him in return, and the lord commended the unjust steward for as much as he had done wisely. All the parables spoken by our Lord have many lessons for us, and we may well take...
