I know the broken tie Of husband, friend, or wife-- Dearer to each than wealth or fame; Yes, dearer far than life. x. I little thought to see thy flower Its quiet beauty lend To deck the tomb, where sweetly sleeps The wife--the mother--friend. XI. There clustered, too, with lovely flowers Of a bright, sunny land; I saw thee in thy simple dress The dearest of the band. XII. Thou starry flower--fit emblem thou Of her, whose loss we mourn--Like thee, she early blossomed here, By love s strong hand up-borne. XIII. Like thee--in early spring she lived--Like thee--she soon was gone--But still like thee, she lives enshrined In hearts she made her own. XIV. How sweet to think her spirit dwells In realms of endless light, Where Spring in all its beauty reigns, Where day ne er ends in night. xv. O that, like...
