Years Saw us together--happy--heart-full boon--Oh God! the difference twixt those hours and Ink. Brass. In many men (and to the generous-hearted the reflection is a bitter one), time will be found. sooner or later, to have completely mastered memory. The images impressed upon the mind may, from various causes, have been either too faintly received at first, or easily over-run by others, that have followed. Thus, a landscape, we have, at an earlier period of our lives, gazed upon, daily, may, on our afterwards attempting to recall it, start up before us a mere confused and indefinite mass of mountain, wood, and water. The harmony of colouring, the nicety of arrangement, the beauty of apposition, or the enhancing powers of light, and shade, impressions once so vividly our own, that we may have nursed the hope of their never wearing out, are not to be restored to us, as readily, as we may have believed. The instant we put memory to the test, she baffles our best endeavours, disobeys our bidding, and refuses to distinctly set down before us her crowd of sweet and hallowed associations. How long! how tenderly! in days gone, may we have dwelt upon the lineaments of a face, of which time has afterwards totally stolen from us a clear and unimpaired recollection; whilst death may have taken away all power of renewing the impression, by forbidding us to ever look again upon the well-loved...
